while the lawyer shouted and gesticulated and the friends of each side jostled and pushed. Police Captain Hayes and Detective Weinthal took the whole party to the station-house.

There Lawyer Robinson made a demand for the child before Chief of Police Donovan. Fecker refused to give him up. The lawyer wanted to make a charge of kidnapping, but after a lot of talk all hands agreed to go to New York and let Judge Fitzkerald settle the matter.

Lawyer Robinson telephoned Capt.

Mrs. Fecker alleges that she adopted the boy, taking him from a founding asylum in Milwaukee in 1897, when she was another man's wife. She admits that no adoption papers were drawn up. Fecker, she says, took the boy to Germany with him, and now refuses to give him up.

Fecker, on the other hand, says his wife told him she kidnapped the boy from wealthy parents in Milwaukee before their marriage. At another time
